Buck Williams loves Josie, known as "Lightning", who owns the saloon left to her by her father, "Dynamite", who, on his dying bed, extracted from her the promise that she would not wed until she had avenged the family on the man who had deserted and betrayed her dead sister.

There is a little boy in the town school entrusted to the care of the school teacher, who tells Lightning that the boy's father is Sedley, superintendent of the mine. Lightning takes a fancy to the child.

She meets the men of the mine who are grumbling about their back pay and are on their way to force their money from Sedley, with the threat of hanging him. Lightning agrees with their method but later her sympathy for the boy is aroused and she rides ahead of the men to the mine office to protect Sedley, whom she then recognizes as her sister's betrayer. For the sake of the child she again spares the wining Sedley and faces the attacking party, giving her word that Sedley will do the right thing. But a moment later they discover that Sedley has escaped with the funds. She pursues him. In a gun battle he falls over an embankment to his death. The men pick up the money pouch. Buck Williams takes Lightning for his own.
